SCRIP TALK

BRR-R-R IT'S COLD OUTSIDE !! Temperatures of 20 below zero were reported in the hills here during the past few days - my furnace went out - the water lines froze at the office and the printing equipment for the bulletin is not working correctly - hope that this issue is readable and that Spring will arrive soon !!

.... Note to Scriptor Tippy: The Old King Coal from the 1859 Illustrated London News would not turn out suitable for reproduction on the stencil cutter. Thanks for sending it along! We are always looking for material for the SCRIP TALK bulletin..... SCRIPTOR MARK DELAWYER of Syracuse, NY pens that he is seeking info on THE M. A. HANNA CO. They had a great deal to do with some mines in NY. Too, he can find no solid evidence of coal ever being mined in NY. He notes that there is coal in the state but no evidence of it being mined commercially. Anyone have any data on NY coal mining??...SCRIPTOR STEVE SODOSKY sent along the following: The FOUR MAIN BONES of any organization: The WISHBONE wishing somebody would do something about it, The JAWBONE doing all the talking but nothing else, The KNUCKLEBONE that knocks every thing that is done, and the BACKBONE that carries the load and does the work !! Which category do you fit in ?? Use the application blank below to sign a new member !!..... A SECOND NOTE TO SCRIPTOR TIPPY: The club always buys the SHOW CARDS for each show so when everything is firm for Somerset, KY for May, remind me and I will order a supply and have them sent to you or to some other member as you direct.....SCRIPTOR JOHN SEBO of New Jersey pens that he hates to see AU and BU grading entering the scrip listings. "Dug", "holed", "worn but readable" are more appropriate "grades" for scrip. He does not want NSCA to head down the slippery slope of AU-50 - BU 62.8 insanity. Do YOU agree with his comments??..... SCRIPTOR MARK BALLARD sends along word that Scriptor Robert Gates (No. 182 since 09/73) passed away on Dec. 8, 1989. Bob had attended several of our conventions before his heart attack.....SCRIPTOR SKIP MYLER'S mother at age 90 died in December. His wife has been hospitalized for two months. Son is stationed at Fort Bragg and daughter is with the US Luge team in Europe for past two months..... SCRIPTOR JAMES BROSIUS writes (as did one or two others) that he does not like to see Minimum Bids listed on the sale items. He feels that the tokens should go for the best offer - or, if the owner insists on a minimum, they should be listed in a separate section for "MB" items only. How do YOU feel about this? Drop me a note and we will try to pass along the comments....USE THE APPLICATION BLANK BELOW TO SIGN A NEW MEMBER!! Too, we can use some PAID ADS at publication price noted below.....

SALE COMMENTS: Approximately ten percent of the membership responded with bids on this sale. I suppose this is a good percentage and I wonder whether the fact that a return addressed envelope was included in the bulletin, caused a much better return?? Most of the listed items brought a good response, however, the items with Minimum Bids largely went begging for an acceptable bid !! Were the MB items overpriced? This sale also saw the computer used to enter bids, prepare invoices, print labels, etc. This, I feel, will make a great improvement in the process and will save me much valuable time in conducting the future sales!! On the new sale in this bulletin, the items listings are computer prepared. As previously noted, there is no space available to give general comments on each listing. Thus, you will have to check each item carefully for items that you might need !!

FUTURE SALE CONSIGNMENTS NEEDED !! We need a GOOD collection to list in the future sales. If you are thinking of selling, please drop me a note!! Over 400 members will have a chance to bid on your items and the commission rate is only 20% on items that sell. The proceeds are put back into the cost of preparing and mailing the bulletin!! Remember: it does not pay me and will not pay you to list page after page of low rarity items in the sales.. These should be grouped in lots of several tokens. Too, we will need a listing of all items submitted - by name, catalog number, denomination, etc. Defects should also be noted on your lists since I do not have the time to inspect and grade each item prior to listing in the sale!! Thanks !!

EXPLOSIVE CONTROL TOKENS

by David E. Schenkman

Published by the National Scrip Collectors Association, this new book catalogs all known tokens used by coal companies to control the use of explosives. These tokens contain various "good for" denominations, such as "One Stick Powder," "One Dynamite Cap," "6 Electric Caps," "Ten Sticks of Explosive," "2 Sticks Monobel," "6 Fuse Caps," "One Detonator," and many others.

Included in the profusely illustrated book is a wealth of historical information about the token-issuing companies, the tokens themselves, and the die sinkers that manufactured them. An exact description of each token is given, and there is a value guide.

The hardbound volume is 140 pages in length with a quality cloth binding.

It is anticipated that the book will be ready for delivery by 15 December. Orders are being accepted now; your check will not be deposited until the book is shipped.

Ida Stull Fought Laws To Be Miner

In 1934, Appalachian Ohio was in the grip of the Great Depression. Bread sold for a nickel; but that nickel was hard to come by. There was no work. Men went hungry or they went on the dole.

Yet in those grim times, men without jobs cheered as Ida Mae Stull fought to keep hers.

This strong-willed woman became a heroine in the grimy coal towns of southeastern Ohio—obscure places like Fox's Bottom, Piney Fork, Miller Station, Cadiz Junction.

Through the magic of the movies, her fame spread. Newsreels reportedly hailed her as "America's First Woman Coal Miner." The New York Times chronicled her underdog saga as she took on the bureaucrats. She fought their laws and she earned the right to eke out a living the only way she knew how—digging coal from its embrace of stubborn rock beneath the surface of the earth.

The glory days are long gone now. Ida Mae Stull is old. She believes her age to be over 80. Her fleeting fame brought no financial bonanza. She lives in poverty just a few miles from the backwoods hollow where she was born. Her only mementos are a few yellowed clippings and a picture or two torn from a magazine.

"I could run out more coal than any man could," Ida Stull boasts today. Her bright, blue eyes still blaze with the old combativeness.

But how she liked to tell her stories even then: About how she started working the coal mines at the age of 6, carrying her daddy's lantern to light his way underground.

How she was cursed with a crooked leg and made to wear an iron brace and a heavy shoe.

How, in 1934, she earned $2 a day digging coal, a fortune for a backwoods gal who could neither read nor write.

How her livelihood was imperiled when the Ohio mine inspector discovered her presence at the Megan Mine near Cadiz, Ohio, and had her removed as "a danger of immediate and extraordinary character."

She had been forewarned the eviction might take place. "I knew he was coming to put me out," Ida recalls today, "so I hid a dozen rotten eggs in my coal cart and when he came in, I let him have it."

Ida Stull was one of 18 children born to a poor coal mining man—a family so poor that children were put out to work at the age of six or seven, according to Ida's younger sister, Elizabeth, who became a farmhand at the age of seven.

Ida Stull was not unique. Other girls worked the small "country bank" coal mines of Appalachia in those Depression days. What made Ida Stull unusual was that she was willing to fight for her right to dig coal.

Her champion in the battle against the bureaucrats was James G. Worley, a Cadiz attorney, who called her ouster "a clear case of the state's official oppression of the weak and helpless."

Worley was successful to a degree. He got the eviction ruling overturned, but failed to get any money in damages for his client. He had sought $10,000.

Stull's jubilant re-entry into the coal mine in 1935 was recorded in newspapers, magazines and newsreels. Reporters quoted her as saying: "It may sound a little odd, but every woman to her own desires, and mine is digging coal. I don't like housekeeping. A pick handle feels better than a broom handle to me . . . my face gets black but I prefer coal dust to a powder puff."

IRON WILL—A court fight in 1935 allowed Ida Stull, called "America's First Woman Coal Miner," to remain on the job. Preferring "a pick handle to a broom handle," Ida's determination was as strong as her strength.

It's ironic. What the state couldn't do, old age and technology accomplished. The coal mines became sophisticated places heavy with technology and modern machines. There was no place for an old lady with a pick and shovel.

Ida Stull lives in obscurity in the tiny town of Germano, Ohio. Kinfolk forced her to move away from her backwoods place into a house with indoor toilet and piped-in hot water. She hates it.

"Got no cow. No chickens. No garden. I never did like a town," she mutters. She refuses to drink the store-bought milk. Her muscular arms have become excessively thin. She is stooped and lame. Her right leg gives out sometimes and she falls to the ground.

Tales of modern mines hold no allure. She scoffs at descriptions of such behemoths as the Silver Spade—that monster shovel that chews out a whole hillside in a single bite in the coal fields near Cadiz where she once worked with a pick and shovel.

To her, mining coal will always be a more personal adventure. First you hack yourself a portal in the side of a hill, bracing it with sturdy timbers of oak and locust. You dig 300 feet below the earth, exposing the vein of prized fuel as you go. To loosen the stubborn rock, you drill a hole, needle in the treacherous black powder, light the squib and while the fuse burns, dancing and jumping crazily—you run out of the mine to wait for the blast.

Is this any work for a woman? Ida Stull shakes her head, snorting. How often she has been asked that over the years. She gives the same answer today that she gave 43 years ago.

"I could dig coal faster and better than any man alive. I could kill any man who tried to do me better. I could do it still." A scrawny arm stretches up in a clenched-fist salute, and there is a special light in those fierce blue eyes.

COAL MINER'S DAY

By: Robert Ferrence, Altoona, PA

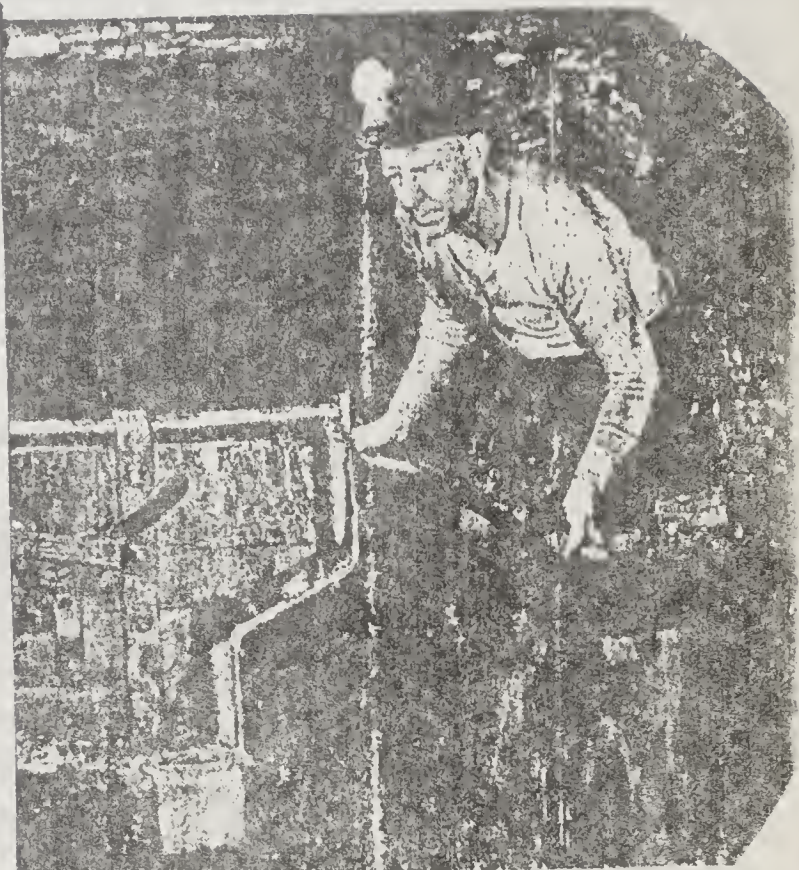

I worked hard in the mines today,
Shoveled coal for little pay,
Worked where the sun will never shine,
My back, it aches; no gold to find.

Not much air, could almost choke,
Roof is cracking, props are broke,
Begin to wonder, start to pray,
Maybe won't make it home today.

Dust and sweat upon my brow,
Straw boss yelling at me now,
Rock to load, and track to lay,
Growing older everyday.

Water running down my neck,
On one more car I hang my check,
As I push the car away,
Eighty cents more I made today.

Weary and tired, to home I walk
Children greet me with happy talk,
Woman kissed me at the door,
Now I know why, what I'm working for.

EXPLOSIVE CONTROL TOKENS

by David Schenkman

As reported elsewhere in this issue of SCRIP TALK in an ad describing the contents of the catalog, NSCA is publishing and selling the book "Explosive Control Tokens" by David Schenkman. It is anticipated that it will be ready for mailing in mid-January if no further delays occur. Printer has delay again until early Feb.

Since NSCA is the publisher, we have been able to establish the special price for NSCA members of $18.00, postage paid. Nonmembers will be paying $22.00. We also have a special dealer price post paid of $15.40 per copy for orders of four (4) to nine (9) copies and $13.20 per copy for orders of ten (10) or more.

In addition, we are having 25 copies of a special bound collectors edition, autographed by David. These will sell for $50.00 post-paid and will be similar to the special edition we published for the Edkins' catalog.

We are taking orders for the regular edition and the special edition at this time for delivery when available. Send your order to Bill Williams, Chairman, NSCA catalog Committee, 152 Kawga Way, Loudon, TN 37774. You do not have to send any money at this time unless you desire to do so. Any checks received will not be deposited until shipment is made. Invoices will be included with each shipment.

Since this catalog is quite comprehensive and will become part of NSCA's official publications, it is anticipated that whenever the Third Edition of "Edkins' Catalogue of United States Coal Company Store Scrip" is published, all of the listings for Explosive Control Tokens will be removed. In addition, David's catalog contains more than 300 listings, many of which are not listed in the Edkins' catalog, plus a number of pages describing the tokens their uses, makers and other interesting information. Why not send your order today.

A foil reading "F. B. J. Co./Good For/25/cents/in Merchandise; Sq 24 mm Sd Br incused obverse and blank reverse has been received by the Catalog Committee. After considerable research and discussion, it has been attributed tentatively to Falls Branch Jellico Coal Co., Newcomb, Tenn listed in Dodrill as F83. The token was dug in a field near Williamsburg Ky in Whitley County which would be near Newcomb in Campbell County. It appears that the style of the token fits into the 1903-1904 time period shown in Dodrill. Your observations or comments are requested as to the validity of this attribution

BELL COUNTY COAL MINES

By: W. C. Stump

My research of the Bell County, Kentucky, coal mines was dealt a serious blow when I found that information between 1896 and 1905 cannot be located. However, starting in 1906, I was able to continue with my series dealing with Bell County, Kentucky, coal mines.

BIG HILL COAL COMPANY - BLANCHE MINES

On January 1, 1906, the Big Hill Coal Company, Blanche, Ky., began operating two mines on Caney Fork of the Left Fork of Straight Creek. The mining operation was located approximately five miles from Pineville, Ky. The officers of the company were H. P. Jones, President and General Manager; H. B. Hanger, Vice-President; J. A. Sullivan, Secretary; and Kuper Hood, Treasurer. The main office was located in the Union Trust Building, Cincinnati, Ohio. The Chief Engineer was Mr. W. E. Taylor, and he wrote an interesting description of the company's operations. His description give us a 1906 insight to this early Bell County coal mining operation.

Mr. Taylor wrote, "They have 900 acres of coal averaging 42 inches thick, with slate roof and bottom, no impurities and of the best quality. The coal makes a very good domestic coal as well as a high class gas and steam coal. While the mine has only been in operation a short time, 'Peerless' coal has a standing second to none."

Describing the entries, Mr. Taylor wrote, "Butt entries are driven 150 feet apart, with a 30-foot pillar between the headings and the air course. The rooms are 24 by 150 feet with a 10-foot rib, being worked on the angle of approximately 60 degrees, forty-foot centers on the entries, on account of the dip of the coal seam."

The company constructed a modern mining camp with 80 three-room houses, 20 four-room houses, and one large eighteen-room two-story boarding house. A large frame commissary and office building was also constructed, and Mr. Taylor wrote, "It is the intention to erect a brick structure for office and commissary purpose, to be 38 by 75 feet, to have all modern improvements, electric light, cold storage, elevator, furnace, and etc. to be located on a spur from the main track for the handling of merchandise. A large barn has been built to accommodate thirty head of stock as well as storage for three cars of hay and two of grain."

Water to the camp was supplied from five wells that had been drilled in various locations in the camp to a depth of more than one hundred feet and each well being cased, cemented, and fitted with a force pump so as to insure a good supply of water and as a precaution against fire.

A blacksmith shop and car repair shop, with a modern drill press and electric power, enabled the company to repair cars and machinery quickly and cheaply.

Concerning the tipple, Mr. Taylor stated, "The tipple, built to accommodate two openings, one on either side of the ravine, is fifty feet high, framed with 10 by 10 and 12 by 12 timbers to suit the load. The South end of the tipple to No. 1 mine is double tracked, having a one percent grade in favor of the loads, over a Phillips cross-over dump, to kick-back, then 1 1/2 % in favor of the empty cars which gravitate back to the pit mouth. The North end of the tipple is 400 feet long, with a 60-foot radius curve, one hundred feet from the dump, and has 1 1/2 % grade in favor of both loads and empties with a kick-back dump and a third track being necessary on this side to handle the slate. The coal was separated by the shaker screen process. The screens, built by the Duncan Foundry and Machine Co., of Alton, Ill., are driven by a belt from a line shaft from a 20 horse power steam engine."

By 1910, the Blanche mines passed into history. As far as the record shows, the company never issued metal company scrip. Over 250 miners worked at the company during its peak of operations, and one would imagine that some type of "company money" was issued. However, I can't find any mention of the use of coal company scrip. My personal opinion is that the company used paper scrip, and due to the short life span of the company, it was destroyed when the mines and company store ceased operating. The scrip collectors of today have failed to find an example of any scrip, and if Scriptor's like Crawford Blakeman, Jack Sharpe, and Jim Cooper don't have an example, then chances are that none exist. However, what makes the hobby of scrip collecting so interesting is that the possibility of finding the unknown adds to the excitement of collecting. So, Crawford and Jack, keep looking because that Big Hill token from Blanche may be just around the corner.
